WHEREAS, in an effort to raise global awareness regarding the effects of specific genetic disorders, March 22, 2014, has been designated as Lynch Syndrome Hereditary Cancer Day, an occasion to reach an international audience and raise awareness of the issues surrounding this rare disease; and

WHEREAS, Lynch Syndrome is caused by an inherited genetic mutation that prevents a gene, which ordinarily prevents cancer, from functioning properly and therefore allows cancer to spread more quickly in the body; and

WHEREAS, as many as 600,000 to 1,000,000 people are affected by Lynch Syndrome in the United States, with approximately 20,000 of those individuals residing in Tennessee; and

WHEREAS, less than five percent of the carriers of the gene are aware of it, putting them at a significantly higher risk of aggressive cancers; and

WHEREAS, children of those with Lynch Syndrome have a fifty percent risk of inheriting the mutated gene; and

WHEREAS, many people are unaware of this disease and, consequently, remain untreated; and
